

Google Gelato?

Written by Marco Attard
08. April 2011

Will Google merge its smartphone (Gingerbread) and tablet (Honeycomb) OS codebases with Google TV's, creating its next mobile OS iteration named after a sweet summery treat? That's what the rumour mill is saying, according to various sites' "reliable" tipsters.

Final confirmation of such rumours shouldn't be too far away, either-- supposedly at Google I/O developers conference on May 10th/11th.

Throwing more oil (or maybe sugar?) into the rumour fire is Google's recent decision to turn its "Google Doodle" into, well, ice cream on April 3rd. The company says it was only to mark the 119th anniversary of the ice cream sundae's invention. Others insist of its being confirmation of Ice Cream OS' invention.

Either way, confirmation-- or lack thereof-- will come on May. Ice cream season will be closer by that time, if anything.

Go Google TV to Become Part of Android Code Branch?