

Motorola subsidiary 3LM resurfaces after 8 months of silence, offering enterprise-class mobile device management and security solutions for use with Android devices.

One might recall Motorola bought 3LM back in February 2011, when it used to be a startup working on handset-agnostic enterprise solutions.

The company offers 3 solutions-- enhanced Android device security (memory and SD card encryption, complete with selective encryption, application white/blacklisting, remote data wiping and strong password enforcement), optimised device management (allowing the remote installation of mission-critical enterprise application, device location and breadcrumb tracking) and secure remote access.

Simply called the 3LM solution, it will be available in October 2011 following enterprise customer trials.
