Good Technology reports tablets make 27% of enterprise customers' Q2 2011 mobile devices activations-- with 95% of those tablets being iPads.

In fact, iOS devices are becoming enterprise's device of choice in general. The iPhone 4 is Q2 2011's most popular device, while iPad (1 and 2) activations total more than Android smartphone and tablet activations combined.

Android tablets still have some way to go-- despite the Motorola Xoom and Samsung Galaxy Tab's debut, Good reports Android tablet activations decline by 3.1% in Q2 2011.

Why the difference? Good accounts it to user preference (particularly from "Bring Your Own device" employees) and verticals such as financial services or healthcare deploying large amounts of iPads.

However, Good forecasts the Apple-Android gap will narrow in tablets, just like it did with smartphones-- but only sometime around 2012.
