

Apple Watch Reaches Series 2

Written by Marco Attard
09. September 2016

Apple claims the Apple Watch is the currently the second best selling watch (just after Rolex) before it announces the next generation of the smartwatch-- the Apple Watch Series 2.

The Series 2 is, essentially, an incremental upgrade over the original model. As many expected it is water resistant up to 50m, and is powered by an S2 dual-core processor and new GPU promising twice the graphical performance of the first model. The display is brighter (1000 nits) while GPS comes built-in.

Construction is in stainless steel, aluminium or, in an Apple first, ceramic with a "gorgeous pearl-white shine." Launching together with Series 2 are new Hermes bands. Nike also gets in the Watch action with Watch Nike Plus-- a version designed for athletes featuring a perforated rubber band and lighter aluminium construction for "the best running experience out there."

The Watch Series 2 comes with an OS update-- version 3 adds adds stickers, on-screen effects, replies via writing on the screen, general app improvements and, perhaps obviously, a version of the ultra-popular Pokemon Go.

As for the first Watch, the smartwatch gets a name change to "Series 1" together with a price cut. The Watch Series 2 arrives on 13 September together with the OS 3 update.

Go Apple Watch Series 2